1.	Please define your understanding of a language combination. Is it a language pair into one or both directions, namely does a "language combination" in your understanding include two pairs Latvian into English and English into Latvian? Referring to your previous answer No. 19 and also in connection to the definition of "language combination". Should the free translation sample be submitted for each language combination (of each part), e.g., 4-pages' sample for Latvian into English and 4-pages' sample for English into Latvian? OR 4-pages sample should include both language pairs (English-Latvian AND Latvian-English)?	Language combination means language pair into both directions, for example, English – Latvian and Latvian – English. The free translation sample should be submitted for each language combination/each direction in each part. The free sample of a completed translation must be at least 4 (four) standard pages long for each procurement part – 2 (two) for each direction.
